A humanist lumotechnic response to a global health crisis
